A demo with riffs borrowed from Dag Nasty and Venom?! Yup, I will leave it to you to figure out in what songs they are. The combination of these influences explain Silent Scream perfectly.

Formed by Randy and Dave after quitting Self Denial for reasons long forgotten they wanted to create a band similar to Corrosion of Conformity's "Animosity." Missed the mark by a little bit.

First recruited was Mike Chubbuck to play guitar. The search for a singer started. Initially Rich Noonan (of Dr. Shrinker fame) on vocals. It didn't work so well and Mike was less than enthused. Next was Grant Knoll (who also moved on to Dr. Shrinker then 911) it was a complete disaster. Mike then floated the idea of him singing and bringing in his friend Ricky Germanson to play guitar. Silent Scream was born.

They wrote a group of songs, played energetic live shows then recorded this tape. Recorded and mixed in about 4 hours it really shows. While far from perfect it is a great document of the band.

Shortly afterward Dave would get sacked, a change in sound with a new singer, Mike moved to guitar and Ricky on bass.

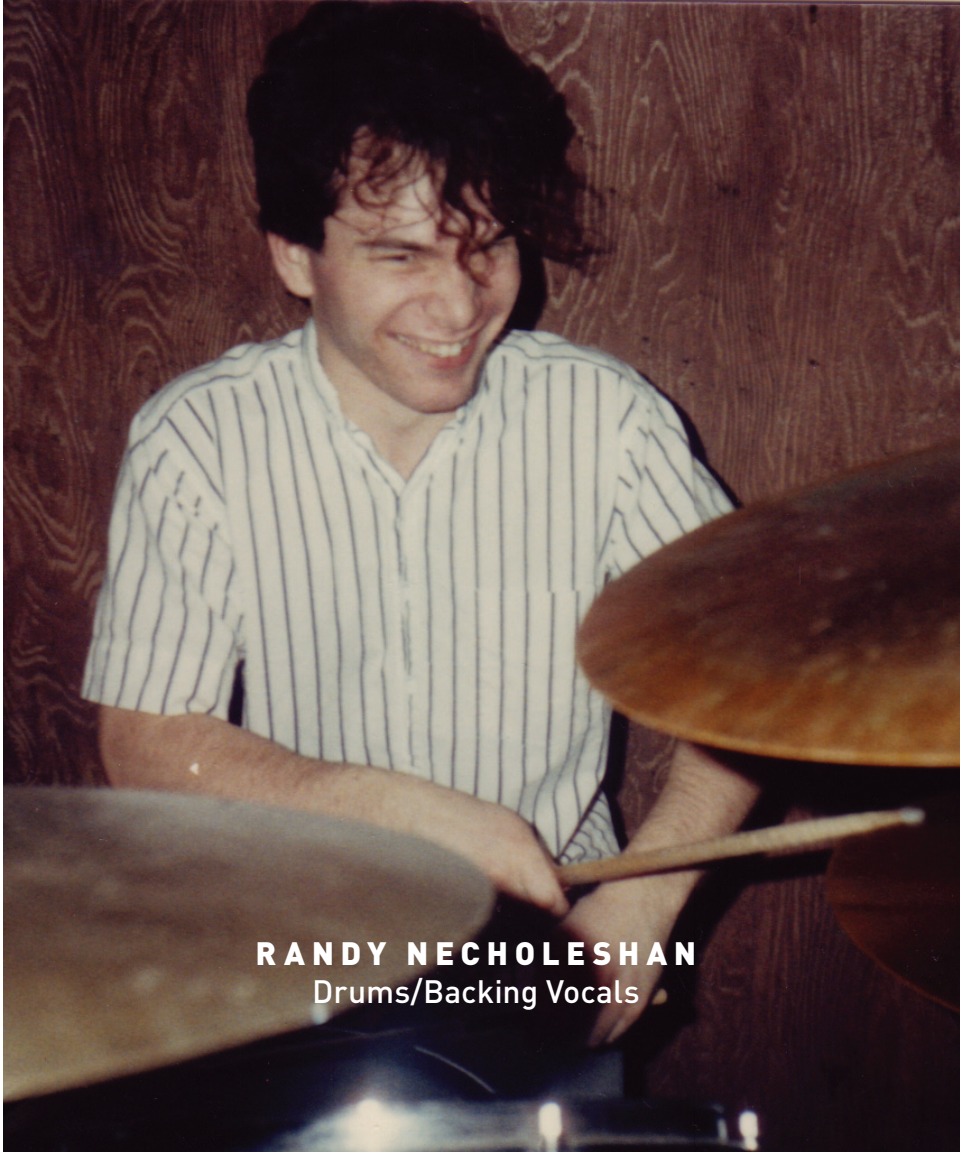

Randy would then leave, another change in sound then the end of the band. Mike and Dave went on to form Loomis, Randy played in many hardcore/noise bands and Ricky is a jazz pianist in New York.
